The New AUTOCAR Control Simple As a Pair of Reins

The control of Type XI Autocar brings automobile driving to the simplicity of horse driving. In the rim of the steering wheel, and forming parts of it, are set two grips, one at the right hand, one at the left. These two grips control the throttle and the spark, regulating the speed of the car from 3 to 35 miles an hour. This arrangement brings the steering and the speed regulating together, so that in all ordinary running the only position necessary for the hands is on the steering wheel.

To be sure this car has a gear shift lever and an emergency brake lever at the right of the driver. The gear shift lever, however, is needed only on particularly hard hills, or very bad bits of road. The car loaded with four passengers will climb nearly all hills on the high gear. The foot brakes being ample for all ordinary use, the emergency brake is rarely required. Hence we say that except in extreme cases only one position is required of the hands in driving Type XI Autocar.

This car has four cylinder vertical motor of 16-20 horse power, double side entrance tonneau, and the smartest lines of any car. It is extremely quiet and vibrationless in running while having great power in proportion to its weight. Type XI Autocar is the ideal car for the man who wants an up-to-date, powerful four passenger car without excessive weight. The price of Type XI is $2000. Catalogue giving full description of it and also of Type X Runabout $900, and Type VIII Tonneau $1400, together with name of dealer nearest you, sent free upon request.

"I SEE THAT PROFESSOR GIGHAM, THE CELEBRATED ALL-AROUND SCIENTIST, IS GOING TO MARRY THAT YOUNG COLLEGE GIRL."

"WHAT'S THAT FOR?"

"HE WANTS TO COMPLETE HIS EDUCATION."

The Inquiring Maiden.

A YOUNG Maiden sought the counsel of Two Wives.

"Tell me," said she, "when I am wed, is it wise to be Jealous of my Husband?"

Said One Wife:

"Often am I jealous of my Husband, but carefully do I hide my Jealousy.

Thus, he doth never suspect it, and so do I keep his Love and his Respect."

Spoke the Other Wife:

"I care not what my Husband may do, and never am I Jealous of him. Yet often do I pretend that I am Greatly Jealous and exhibit brave fits of Jealousy before him. Thus do I keep his Love and his Respect."

"Ah," quoth the Young Maiden, "I learn, then, that the Wise Woman concealeth Jealousy when it is present, and feigneth it when it is absent. Remembering this, I too shall be enabled to keep my Husband's Love and his Respect."

VOL. XLVI. SEPT. 21, 1905. No. 1195.
17 WEST THIRTY-FIRST STREET, NEW YORK.

IT was an instructive incident that the Tokio mob should have burned ten Christian churches to spite the peace of Portsmouth.

There is no mistaking the extreme general dissatisfaction that the peace has given in Japan, and they blame the Americans for it, which is rough. It was not reasonable of the Tokio mob to burn churches, nor even to throw stones at Mr. Edward Harriman. Since persons who like the peace give most of the credit for it to President Roosevelt, it is reasonable enough that persons who don't like it should lay the blame for it on him. That is not just, but probably he can stand it, and perhaps it is as well that all the world should not be excessively pleased with him at once. Universal, untempered admiration is not safe for the admired one. It breeds reaction.

There are those—a good many of them—who fear the peace was brought about prematurely, and wish our President had kept his hands off. We suspect that that opinion would not have even such backing as it has if the inside facts about all the influences and considerations that induced the President's action were known. We suspect that if the whole truth ever comes out it will transpire that he acted, not only as the welcomed friend of both combatants, but as the informally authorized agent of most of the civilized world. He is probably entitled to rather less credit for spontaneous enterprise, and rather more credit for discreet helpfulness, than he will get.

That the Japs should show samples of misbehavior is not on every account to be regretted, for admiration of them has been somewhat too unmixed to last. No people could hope to live fully up to the reputation they have been acquiring, and a timely jolt to our ideal of them may put it on a surer footing. Their peace is a good deal better than the Tokio mob thinks it, and is likely to improve very much upon closer acquaintance.

MEANWHILE, taking it for granted that the Mikado's Government is strong enough to make the peace hold in spite of popular dissatisfaction, what is Japan going to do next? She wanted the indemnity money chiefly to buy more ships with, and strengthen herself, but her new alliance with England is a better strengthener than ships. What is Japan going to do to China, and what will China do to herself? Is the time coming soon, when, China under Japan's tuition having learned to fight a little better, every continent will have to tend more strictly to its own business?

Very likely. The East has awakened and will stay awake, and there will be changes, and Japan will have her hands full of business without fighting anybody for the present. And the Asiatics will have a better hold on Asia than they have had this long time. But they will never lapse back into exclusiveness nor use the Western knowledge they have learned to exclude the Western people. There will be trade and railroads; an opened Asia, never again a closed one.

WE half regret that there has not been further discussion of the interesting issue of manners which lately developed between Mrs. Mackay, the new member of the Roslyn, Long Island, School Board, and the Rev. Thomas S. Duhigg, rector of St. John's Roman Catholic parish in Brooklyn, and ex officio head of the parochial school attached to that parish. Father Duhigg's new $160,000 school building now in course of construction will have twenty class-rooms, and he is raising money to furnish them. An application was sent (by mistake, it appears) to Mrs. Mackay for a subscription. Declining, she replied: "I absolutely disapprove of parochial schools of the Romanist faith, and consider them a gravemenace to our country." Father Duhigg wrote a letter in reply, in the course of which he said to Mrs. Mackay: "In the schools you dislike so much we teach our children the ordinary courtesies of life. As, for example, we would tell them that the use of the word 'Romanist' betrays bad form, and that nice, intelligent people would not be guilty of such a blunder." Then, apparently, he gave both letters to the newspapers. Seen by the reporters, he said that Mrs. Mackay should have omitted from her note her disapproval of the parochial schools and the word "Romanist."

If Father Duhigg's note stands for parochial-school manners and Mrs. Mackay's for public-school manners, we do not see that there is much choice between them. Both are blunt documents. As a member of the Roslyn School Board, a representative body which engages a large share of public attention, Mrs. Mackay may have been justified under the circumstances in recording her disapproval of the parochial schools. It appears, however, to have been a mistake to call the Roman Catholics "Romanists," since that word, though conveying no obvious disparagement, seems to have given offence. But Father Duhigg's exhibition of parochial-school manners is not very edifying. He disparages the value of Mrs. Mackay's opinions, implies that she has never learned the ordinary courtesies of life, calls her mistake a blunder, and prints her letter without her leave. That is surely a lame exhibition of the amenities of controversy. The literary sand-bag, not the bludgeon—the rapier, not the broadsword—is the proper weapon to use in exchanges of this sort.

A Great Satisfaction.

"YOU owe five hundred dollars."

It was a gay scene at the house of Mrs. Pincher-Puncher. The guests were just about to disband as the young man, who had been playing bridge all the evening, with blanched face gazed at his hostess.

"Five hundred dollars," he repeated. "Why, I thought it was a friendly game of bridge. I didn't know it was for money."

"That is your own fault. I'll trouble you for a check, please."

The guest hesitated. Apparently he was being held up. And yet he realized Mrs. Pincher-Puncher's power in the social world. She could ruin him. He saw there was nothing else to do.

He drew a check-book from his pocket, and accompanying her into the library, wrote out a check for the correct amount and passed it over.

The next day the young man sat in the humble dwelling of one of the most skillful burglars in the country, with a letter of introduction from a politician.

"What can I do for you, sir?" said the burglar.

"A simple thing. Last night I was held up and robbed of five hundred dollars by Mrs. Pincher-Puncher, one of our well-known society women. I want you to call there this evening, if possible, and get my money back. Here's a plan of the house, and you can have all you make, less the five hundred."

The Heiress (pouting): THE COUNT FAILED TO CALL ON ME LAST EVENING—AND HAS JUST WIRED ME THAT HE "FORGOT IT."

"OH, YOU MUST TRY AND OVERLOOK IT. HE IS NOTORIOUSLY CARELESS IN MONEY MATTERS, YOU KNOW."

Twenty-four hours later the burglar's card was sent up.

"Well, what luck?"

"Here is your five hundred. And five hundred more."

The young man smiled. "You must have made a good thing out of it," he said, "when you are willing to pay me twice as much as I wanted."

"Yes, sir. But it wasn't so much the money I made as the satisfaction."

"What do you mean?"

The burglar smiled.

"You see, it's this way," he said. "I got there beforehand and looked in through the window. My conscience used to trouble me some. I used to think I was wicked. But now that I've seen the operations of some of those smart people, it's worth almost any amount of money to me to know that I am so guileless and good!"

The Brilliant.

CIRCUMSTANCES beyond our control sometimes oblige us to meet brilliant people. Secretly we may feel a desire to avoid them, but there is a certain pride which compels us to appear at ease in their company, even though we never were more uncomfortable.

The man who bristles with information may not be unnecessarily unkind. We are, it is true, obliged to listen to him, and it is always wise to be on our guard against revealing the fact that we know anything at all, lest he have the opportunity, which he dearly loves, of correcting us. We can in a measure throw ourselves on his mercy, and if we have an ordinary constitution, we may happily survive his attacks of knowledge.

But when a brilliant person rises upon our horizon, there is little hope for us. If he does not hull us at once with a straight shot, he will worry us to death by a fusillade of repartee, and leave us a wreck, to drift away to some friendly port of dullness, where we can be nursed back to our mediocre existence.

We have always felt that the litany we repeat every Sunday when we happen to be in church is strangely defective. It should be amended to read:

"Good Lord, deliver us from brilliant folks."

We have never yet been able to discover the particular reason why a brilliant person was an object of envy.

We have heard of men marrying brilliant wives and regretting it afterwards. The moment that we hear a person is very bright, we begin to shrink. Shall we be able to live up to him? We know that we shall not. Even to make the effort involves us in a species of hypocrisy.

The truth is, that, in these days, it behooves every one to be careful not to be born too bright. If we once acquire a reputation for this sort of thing, we may never be able to recover from it.

LOVE is eternal ; it is only the subject that changes.

HOME AGAIN.

The Ballad of Sagamore Hill.

IS morning, and King Theodore
Upon his throne sits he
As blithely as a King can sit
Within a free countree,
And now he thinks of submarines,
And now of peace and war.
His royal robe he handeth Loeb,
Then wireth to the Czar :

"Come off, come off, thou Great White Czar,
Come off thy horse so high!
Send envoys straight and arbitrate
Thy diplomatic pie."
Then straightway to the Mik-a-dōo
This letter he doth limn,
"Come off thy perch, thou Morning Sun,
And do the same as him!"

Then straightway from the Rising Sun
Come envoys three times three,
Komura neat and Sato sweet,
(An Irish Japanee).
Small men are they with domy brains,
And in their fingers gaunt
A list of seven hundred things
They positively want.

Then straightway from St. Petersburg
Come envoys six times two,
De Witty grand and Rosen bland
And Nebotoffkatoo—
Volkynieffskygrandovitch—
(Here see the author's note,
"The balance of that noble name Came on another boat.")

'Twas on the royal yacht Mayflower
They met, that noble crew.
"De Witty grand, shake Sato's hand—
Komura, how-dee-do!"

While forty thousand gun-salutes
Concuss on Oyster Bay,
A proud man is King Theodore
Upon that trysting day!

To Portsmouth town, to Portsmouth town,
The sweating envoys puff,
To speak of tin and Saghalien
And eke to bluff and bluff—
But Theodore at Oyster Bay
Doth while the times between
By taking trips and dives and dips
Within his submarine.

For many a day the Japanees
Uphold their fingers gaunt,
And mention seven hundred things
They positively want—
For many a day the Muscovites
Down-plant their Russian shoes,
And mention seven hundred things
They positive refuse.

Till haply from his submarine
King Theodore doth peep
And stops a wireless telegram
That buzzeth o'er the deep:
"O Theodore, O goodly King,
The envoys call our bluff—
Despite the fuss the stubborn Russ
Disgorgeth not the stuff."

"Come hither, Mr. Serge de Witt!"
King Theodore doth say,
"Now tell me quick by the Big Stick
Why dost refuse to pay?"
"Come hither, Baron Kom-u-ra,
And sit upon my lap—
Why dost thou cuss and make a fuss
Thou naughty, naughty Jap?"

To Portsmouth back, to Portsmouth back,
The envoys then do flee,
And each is sad and mild and meek
As an envoy ought to be,
And as they speak of Terms of Peace
Politeness doth ensue—
Like Prince Alphonze and Duke Gaston,
'Tis ever "After you!"

So soon the terms of Peace are signed
And put upon a shelf,
And Theodore doth straightway take
Great credit to himself—
The bugles call and roses fall
On good King Theodore,
As round the Stick the kodaks click
Full twelve times thirty-four.

* * *

And now when ancient grandsires sit
Within the evening grey,
And oysters frolic noisilee
All over Oyster Bay,
The greybeard tells his little niece
How Theodore did trek
To drag the gentle Bird of Peace
To Portsmouth—by the neck.

THE HARVEST MOON.

The Beginning Season.

WELL, friends, here we are again—slightly disfigured, but still in the ring, to use a bit of fighting parlance. The new season brings signs of promise. That sleeping beauty, dramatic art, is all ready for the magic kiss of genius which shall awaken her from the innocuous desuetude into which she has been thrown by that wicked monster known to the criminal authorities as the Theatrical Trust.

OF large importance to theatre-lovers in America is the new opposition to the Trust. The combination of Messrs. Belasco, Fiske and Shubert, if it be carried out with wisdom, energy and loyalty, means more to the American stage and to the future pleasure of American theatre-goers than anything that has occurred for a long time. The immediate failure or success of a number of productions is not of so great importance, even from the artistic and critical point of view, as the failure or success of this new business venture. Competition is truly said to be the life of trade, and, at the present juncture, honest competition is the only thing which will save the life of dramatic art.

We are assured that the new organization means to substitute fair and courteous dealing with the public, and with those who are dependent on the theatre, for the savage and blackguardly methods of the Trust. Of course, this alone will not suffice to success. The public is bound to go where it will find the attractions and accommodations which will please it best. The Trust is rich and powerful, it is entrenched in the best theatres throughout the country, and still has the first call on the great majority of theatrical attractions. This is the first season of the opposition and, while it has the good-will of the thinking and reading public on its side, it will find it uphill work to win over that unthinking mass which cares only to be amused. If the whole public would take the trouble to know the situation, it might be indulgent to the new combination during the coming season, but, as things are, the new venture has got to rely almost entirely on the excellence of its offerings and trust to its staying powers to carry it through the period of beginnings.

LIFE wishes all success to Messrs. Belasco, Fiske and Shubert. The future of dramatic art in America rests largely in their hands. May they stand together loyally and fearlessly in the battle before them.

THE local manager in cities outside of New York is going to be an important figure in the coming contest. As a rule he has sold his soul to the devil in the form of the Trust. To these managers the Messrs. Shubert, who are arranging out-of-town tours for the new combination, have addressed a letter, from which we make the following extracts as being of interest to theatre-goers throughout the country:

Is there any way in which you can arrange to book our attractions, in conjunction with those of David Belasco, Harrison Grey Fiske, Frank Perley and John C. Fisher?

As you doubtless are aware, Klaw and Erlanger, for purely personal reasons, have refused to give us time at any of the theatres which they represent. This means that they are willing that managers of houses shall do without some of the best attractions in the country, if only it will serve their purpose.

We want to play in your city and in your theatre. If we cannot arrange for time with you we shall be compelled to build or lease some other place of amusement where you are. We don't want to go to this expense and we don't want to create this opposition to you. There has never been any quarrel between our firm and the managers of theatres throughout the United States. It is certain that you do not wish to encounter such opposition as we are prepared to offer, if necessary. It is also certain that the people of your city will not care to be deprived of the opportunity of seeing Madame Bernhardt, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Mrs. Fiske, Blanche Bates, David Warfield and other stars in the same rank, simply to gratify Klaw and Erlanger.

Why give up part of your profits and still be obliged to dispense with the best attractions in America? Why engender dissatisfaction among your patrons? We can fill all the time at your theatre. These are the attractions which we can give you:

The list which follows includes such attractions as Sarah Bernhardt, Ada Rehan in a Bernard Shaw play, David Warfield, Mrs. Fiske in "Leah Kleschna," Mrs. Leslie Carter, Blanche Bates, Bertha Kalisch, Bertha Galland, Jefferson de Angelis in "Fantana," De Wolf Hopper, Eddie Foy in "The Earl and the Girl," Alice Neilsen, Grace Van Studdiford in "Lady Teazle," Henry Miller, Margaret Anglin, "The Darling of the Gods," and "Mary and John."

In some places these attractions will have to be presented in non-fashionable theatres. If for no other reason than a selfish regard for the future, the public in these places should put up with a little inconvenience or lack of luxury to support the new venture.

MR. LAWRENCE, who manages the Madison Square Theatre, is evidently not afraid of Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger and their fellow bandits who are comprised in what is or was for it seems that the organization is in process of decay) the Theatrical Managers' Association. LIFE's reason for its belief in Mr. Lawrence's courage is that he is not afraid to accept LIFE's money for tickets to his theatre nor to admit LIFE's representative when those tickets are presented at the door. Courage among theatrical managers is so rare that LIFE is glad to applaud the exhibition of it given by Mr. Lawrence.

Incidentally there is a very pretty and interesting play being presented at the Madison Square. It is called "The Prince Chap," with the accent on the "Prince." It is a novelty in that its heroine is pictured in three stages from childhood to womanhood; first by two different and very clever child actresses, and in the final development by an actress of maturer years. The author, Mr. Edward Peple, is a newcomer as a dramatist, but he shows in this unpretentious little play that he knows how to work adroitly on the senses of pathos and humor. Throughout the piece one's feelings alternate rapidly between tears and laughter. In the cast are Mr. Cyril Scott, who has a juvenile part admirably suited to his powers; Mary Keogh, with a new and laughable conception of the London slavey; Mr. Thomas A. Wise, here, as always, an admirable man servant; Grace Kimball and Grayce Scott in conventional rôles; and two little girls named Helen Pullman and Edith Speare, who are charming stage children.

"The Prince Chap" is much more interesting than its meaningless title would indicate. It is a sane play for sane people who do not have to be stirred up by sensationalism, and who can enjoy a wholesome play wholesomely and cleverly done.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY JEROME, who at present writing is too ill to perform all of his official duties, has appointed Mr. James W. Osborne as special counsel and prosecuting attorney in the criminal case against the Theatrical Trust managers, who have conspired to drive LIFE's critic out of his position. Mr. Osborne is widely known as one of the most fearless and scholarly members of the New York bar. There are many important legal questions involved in this prosecution and Mr. Osborne may be relied upon to discover how far the subtle crime of conspiracy may be carried with impunity. Business conspiracies are among the worst of our public dangers, and LIFE's readers will be glad to know that this particular one stands a very good chance of being scotched. Metcalfe.

SUMMER IS OVER.

THE LATEST BOOKS

ONE does not often meet in these days so various and so varied a company as fill the pages of Talks in a Library with Laurence Hutton; pages wherein reminiscence, anecdote, glimpses of character, current comment and curious information tumble upon one another's heels in a tempting medley. The book is one that can be opened at any page with equal relevance and closed at the end of any paragraph with equal finality, but the stream of monologue, if never deep, is never stagnant, and one returns again and again to drift on its current, alternately interested and amused.

Two of this summer's stories, On Tybee Knoll, by James B. Connolly, and A Fool for Love, by Francis Lynde, deal with the struggle of a young contractor against unscrupulous opponents, a subject of which Calumet K was one of the earliest, as it remains one of the best treatments. Mr. Connolly's book tells of the logging venture of a young tug captain in Savannah waters, and Mr. Lynde's of a right-of-way war in the Colorado foot-hills between a railway magnate and the civil engineer of a rival road. Both stories are readable, but both heroes are too heroic for their jobs, and the success of each is as unconvincing as it is unearned.

Sturmsee, by the anonymous author of Calmire, is at least two things that are usually better avoided by both writers and readers, being a sequel for one, and for another a didactic and controversial treatise in a cloak of fiction. But it is seldom that any writer, with as broad and balanced an interest in the abstract philosophy of life, possesses also so facile a creative gift and so entertaining a power of narration, and the story of Carl Sturmsee contains too good a quality of fiction and too interesting a series of discussions to be condemned because these elements are mixed. Calmire, which appeared a number of years ago and dealt with the subject of religion, attracted considerable attention and has continued to command a steady, although an unobtrusive, popularity. Sturmsee deals in a similar manner with the relations of man with his fellows and deserves, and will doubtless receive, a similar reception.

Frank Lewis Nason, the author of several novels, including The Vision of Elijah Berl, lately published, is a mining engineer, the scene of whose stories has been the mountains of California. Berl's "vision" was the feasibility of irrigation in the orange belt, and the story of the vision's fulfillment shows rather tantalizing fictional and dramatic possibilities, for Mr. Nason, in the literary field, is a better prospector than miner. He knows auriferous gravel when he sees it, but much of the dust is lost in the process of panning.

Paths of Judgement, by Anne Douglas Sedgwick, is an excellent example of literary vivisection, a novel whose characters live indeed, but only to take their turn upon the operating table; their actions detailed, not that we may follow them, but that we may identify the motor-centers which control them; their story, for there is a story, but the history of the case. In themselves the subjects of this mental clinic are scarcely worthy of such careful dissection, but the skill of the operator is sufficient to excite the interest and hold the attention of her audience.

A number of essays upon various phases of American life and character appear in a volume called American Thumb Prints; a volume which makes us regret the abandonment of the pamphlet, that literary deaconate which so fitly interposed between the lay-readership of the magazine article and the full orders of board covers; a volume which is not unworthy of a passing sojourn on the library table, but with scanty claims to shelf room.

little stories of coondom, which, like their predecessors, have the two merits of being well written and of being real coon—a touch of sentiment, a touch of pathos, occasionally a touch of monkey; stories in rag-time.

In addition to being a portrayer of the beautiful, Mr. C. Allan Gilbert possesses a rare artistic ingenuity. Every one remembers his "Vanity"—a skull from one point of view, and a beauty at her toilet from another. "The Honeymoon" is equally ingenious and more agreeable.

GETTYSBURG AND WASHINGTON.

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The battlefield of Gettysburg, and the National Capital are attractions so alluring that few would feel like refusing to visit them, especially in the cool Fall days. It is to place these two attractions within easy reach of every one that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company announces a tour over the interesting battlefield, through the picturesque valleys of Maryland, and an entertaining stay at Washington.

The tour will leave New York, West Twenty-third Street, 7.55 A.M., and Philadelphia 12.20 P.M., Saturday, September 23, in charge of one of the Company's tourist agents, and will cover a period of six days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the party throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $22 from New York, $21 from Trenton, $19 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents; Tourist Agent, 263 Fifth Avenue, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address Geo. W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.
